

Muckleshoot MESSENGER

Section 2

April 7, 2023

SHANE WHITE EAGLE, RISING STAR IN MMA

Fighting brings Shane White Eagle closer to his culture and helped him grow into a leader. He exemplifies the warrior spirit and represents his family, his team, and the Muckleshoot Tribe. Here's Shane, in his own words:

A Warrior... that's something that we are. It's something we've been doing forever, since the beginning of time. We're all warriors. Whether you're a gatherer or whether you're a hunter, we're a tribe. We work together. We've stuck together. We've been resilient from the beginning. Just the fact that we're still here proves that.

When I first got into this sport, there's this ignorance out there, where it's just seen as brawling; but I quickly realized that I needed to have this self-control that I've never had to have in any other sport. It's made me comfortable being uncomfortable. It's not just about fighting. It's "Can I be a father?" "Can I be a husband?" Can I be a community member?"

Yeah, my wife's definitely a warrior. People think warriors are the ones that are out in battle, but it's the ones that can make things happen at home, or for the village. In today's society, it's easy to get disconnected. Fighting has brought me closer to my culture. Fighting has grounded me. I'm connected to everything. And culturally, that's the way that we carry ourselves.

My blood is rich with Native blood, being Makah and Muckleshoot. For me to come back home and connect with my people... there's a lot of things that I feel like I can help with our people by the way that I carry myself, and I think fighting is the way that I can do that.

I think having the tribe support me is everything. I have my mini-tribe at home with my family and my kids and they allow me to do what I do. I have my actual tribe, Muckleshoot, that supports me and allows me to chase this highest level of competition, and I have my team that I work with on a day-to-day basis that prepares me for these moments and keeps me on point. It's humbling.

Our people are resilient and they've gone through harder things than what I'm going through right now, and especially in the last few years, when I've been a part of a lot of funerals and a lot of passing of family members. So, it's almost like this is a way to step up and be a leader for our people. A Warrior.

Kraken add Muckleshoot Tribe to jersey with new art and youth sports initiative

The Seattle Kraken added the Muckleshoot Indian Tribe's seal to its jerseys Feb. 22 in a first for the National Hockey League. Tribal Chairman Jaison Elkins was the first to don the jersey at the Kraken Community Iceplex in Northgate.

By Marissa Nall, Reporter, Puget Sound Business Journal

The Muckleshoot Indian Tribe's official seal will appear on the Seattle Kraken jersey this year, representing a deal between the two organizations to launch art and youth programs and build a multisport court on the Muckleshoot Reservation.

The tribe is the first jersey partner for the young franchise, which was established in 2018 and began playing in the NHL in 2021. Seattle will also be the first major North American men's sports franchise to have a tribal logo on its jersey.

"We launched our franchise with an eye to the future as well as an acknowledgment of the past," Kraken CEO Tod Leiweke said in a news release. "This partnership manifests our gratitude and respect for the Muckleshoot People, past and present, who are the ancestral keepers of the land upon which Climate Pledge Arena sits and we play."

The partnership between the two dates back to when the Muckleshoot Canoe Family singers performed a blessing in the early stages of construction on the arena. The tribe has also been a broadcast sponsor for the team during power plays.

"The Muckleshoot Indian Tribe is proud to begin this first-of-its-kind partnership with the Kraken, who worked with us from day one to acknowledge that Climate Pledge Arena is located on our ancestral homeland and to honor our enduring place in the cultural fabric of this region," said Muckleshoot Tribal Chairman Jaison Elkins.

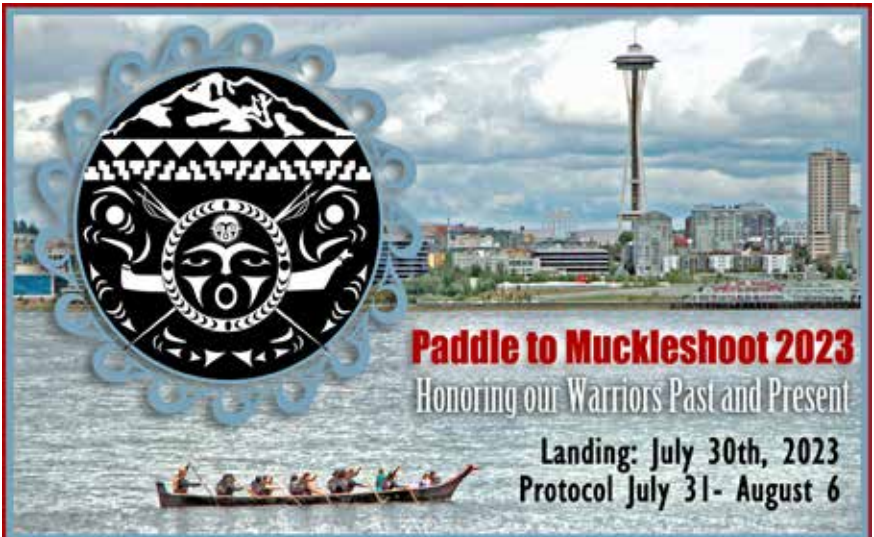

"This joyful day brings with it a sense of hope that our young people will see themselves represented by the team in the heart of Seattle and around the country with our Tribe's logo on the front of every Kraken jersey."

Sacred House News

In February, six of our residents and three staff visited the Quileute Recovery Jam for the weekend. The residents participated in drumming and singing and visited the Forks area.

They visited Ruby beach, saw where Curt Cobain grew up and checked out the Twilight shows favorite spots, and did some souvenir shopping. We ate a delicious dinner and met some refugees that the Quileute Tribe is supporting from Ukraine. We had a great time and are grateful to the hosts for kindly welcoming us!

Sound Vibrational Healing for Families & Youth

By: Jennifer Ambriz, PhD, LMHC

“If you want to know the secrets of the Universe, think in terms of Energy, Frequency, and Vibration.” –Nikola Tesla

Many families and youth in this modern day society are overwhelmingly bombarded by fast-paced and high stress environments. This has contributed to a disconnection from the natural cycles of Mother Earth. Furthermore, many harmful impacts are seen on the human body’s nervous/immune system and within the structure of families/communities. Dr. Robert M. Sapolsky, Neurological Sciences Professor at Stanford University, states, “Stress-related disease emerges, predominantly, out of the fact that we so often activate a physiological system that has evolved for responding to acute physical emergencies, but we turn it on for months on end, worrying about mortgages, relationships, and promotions.” Our bodies are about 60% water, which makes them very strong conductors of sound, therefore--Sound Vibrational Healing is an effective tool for helping restore the natural balance of Mind, Body, and Spirit.

As a Mexican Indigenous female, I have personally experienced many of the harmful impacts as I adapted to how I was taught to do so in the mainstream education and society. This has led me to explore holistic Medicine and traditional Indigenous healing practices. During this pursuit, I crossed paths with Sound Vibrational Healing and this has been one of the most positively impactful tools in my own healing journey. The Muckleshoot Tribe recently supported my further education at Atma Buti—International Sound and Vibrational School (AtmaButi.org) in Colorado. I am excited to offer sound baths and individual sessions incorporating Sound Vibrational Healing techniques for Youth and Families.

Jennifer is a Youth Mental Health Therapist with Family and Youth Services, now located in the Behavioral Health Building. Please call FYS, if you are interested in exploring Sound Vibrational Healing for you or your youth at (253) 804-8752.

Teaching Culture to Youth

By Henry Miller

In a collaboration project between the Warriors Path Program, the Culture Department, and Behavioral Health, youth in the community are being taught traditional ways of processing fish, including drying, smoking, and canning methods. This process, called šabus has been utilized for many generations.

Teaching youth the traditional practices helps them develop pride in their culture, learn new skills, find passion and joy in life, and is a strong deterrent from high-risk behaviors, such as the use of drugs and alcohol.

Tyson Simmons, Sam Obravac, Keith Stevenson, and Henry Miller (BHP Cultural Liaison) have been leading this project. All of the fish being processed will be given out to our community elders, during the Canoe Journey, and to people attending inpatient treatment in a care package.

Fifteen youth community members have participated in this project and engaged in the opportunity to learn traditional practices that are highly valuable skills today, as well as for future generations.

Pour Some Sugar on Me: Managing Blood Sugar for Diabetes

by Colet Bennett, Diabetes Nurse – Muckleshoot Medical Clinic & Community Health Program

Glucose comes from the Greek word for "sweet" - It's a type of sugar created from digesting food and the human body uses it for energy. As it travels through the bloodstream to cells, it's called blood glucose or blood sugar. Glucose is made mainly from foods rich in carbohydrates "carbs" like bread, potatoes, and rice.

- Type 2 Diabetes, the cells don't respond to insulin like they should. So the pancreas needs to make more insulin to move glucose into the cells. Eventually, the pancreas is damaged and can't make enough insulin to meet the body's needs.

Many foods break down into blood glucose is used for energy to fuel our brain, heart, and muscles. Blood glucose usually comes from the food we eat or is made by the liver. It's usually found in two places; in the blood stream as it is carried to all of our organs and cells, and inside the cell where it is changed into energy. Most of the cells in our body use glucose for energy. Insulin is like a key and without the insulin "keys" there is no way to unlock the cells of our body to let in the blood glucose. Because blood glucose cannot move from our blood into our cells, the blood glucose stays in our blood, therefore causes blood sugar levels to rise. Managing blood sugar is a key to controlling Diabetes.

Signs and Symptoms of Type 2 Diabetes

The symptoms of type 2 diabetes can be so mild that you don't notice them. About 8 million people who have it don't know it. Symptoms include:

- Being very thirsty
- Peeing a lot
- Blurry vision
- Being cranky

- Tingling or numbness in your hands or feet
- Fatigue/feeling worn out
- Wounds that don't heal
- Yeast infections that keep coming back
- Feeling hungry
- Weight loss without trying
- Getting more infections

Helpful tips to manage glucose levels:

- Manage our weight. Exercise regularly: Exercise can help reduce the glucose in our blood. Aim for 30-45 minutes of physical activity 3-5 days of the week. Activities such as brisk walking outside, on a treadmill or at a mall, dancing, swimming, low impact aerobics, stair climbing, and riding a stationary bike.
- Quit smoking: ask your medical provider for assistance with smoking cessation intervention as needed.
- Eat a balanced healthy diet, avoiding processed foods and sugary beverages. We encourage those whom are followed at the Health and Wellness Center to schedule an appointment with both the Registered Dietician and Diabetes Nurse.
- Glucose monitoring: Monitoring blood sugar routinely and consistently according to our medical provider's recommendation. Bring our glucometer to our diabetes follow up appointments!

- Taking our medications regularly and consistently: Medications may be ordered to help manage glucose levels. If medications are not taken routinely, our medical provider would be unable to know whether our current dosage of medication is therapeutic.

With a bit of knowledge and dedication, Type 2 diabetes can be controlled. Managing diabetes means getting as close to a normal (nondiabetic) blood glucose level as we safely can. Generally, this means levels between 70 and 130 mg/dl before meals, and less than 180 two hours after starting a meal. We do not need to figure these things out on our own. The Muckleshoot Medical Clinic and Community Health Program diabetes care team includes a doctor, dietitian, diabetes nurse, and other health care professionals. We offer a support team to help manage Diabetes!
